07 Your chart: four pillars, Five Elements, Ten Gods and luck cycles

01 Compatibility score

One number for the pair, made of three parts. 60 and up is a good fit; under 45 means real work.

Harmony 58 · Clash 22 · How your Day Masters meet: 甲 → 壬 They fuel you

02 Your element mix, side by side

Left: you. Right: them. Where one is high and the other low, one of you brings what the other lacks.

Plenty of Metal between you; very little Wood.

03 Pillar by pillar: where your charts meet

Each square is one of your pillars (rows) against one of theirs (columns). Combine and Three Harmony pull you together; Clash, Punishment and Harm are where you rub. The Day–Day square is the closest bond.

You ↓ Them →	Year 午	Month 戌	Day 申	Hour 酉
You · Year 申	·	·	同 Same	·
You · Month 申	·	·	同 Same	·
You · Day 子	冲 Clash	·	三合 Harmony	·
You · Hour 巳	·	·	合 Combine	三合 Harmony

合 Combine: Pull together
三合 Harmony: Work in the same direction
冲 Clash: Push against each other
刑 Punishment: Old sore spots get pressed
害 Harm: Quiet misunderstandings

04 Your reading

What drew you together

What drew you to Sam was the sense of calm and support Sam naturally provided, which made you feel grounded and understood. You appreciated how Sam steadied you, and that feeling of being anchored was a big part of the connection. As a Wood Day Master, you bring growth, plans, learning and reaching out to the relationship. As a Water Day Master, Sam brings flow, ideas, communication and adaptability to the relationship.

What wore it down

You and Sam had opposite instincts: one of you wanted to settle things at once, the other needed to step back, and a branch clash between your charts made that spark without warning. Over time the sudden friction wore the relationship down, because the same spark kept returning and neither of you saw the pattern while it was happening. It was not anyone's fault; the two tempos simply kept colliding. You and Sam agreed so easily that hard talks were always postponed, and small annoyances quietly hardened into resentment. Keeping the peace felt kinder than raising issues, so the same unresolved points kept resurfacing in different arguments. It repeated because avoiding friction was easier than risking the calm you had built.

Your side of the pattern

Under relationship pressure you tend to push for a decision and keep the conversation moving, because stalled talk feels like losing ground. You mean it as care, but it can land as pressure, so say plainly that you need an answer and then give the other person room to think.

05 Points of tension

Not a verdict: these are the places the two charts push on each other, strongest first.

Sparks in the room · Strong

You · Day 子 / Them · Year 午

Try this: Name the decision out loud before either of you steamrolls the day.

Watch for: Heat jumps. One of you pushes; the other braces.

The easy lock · Mild

You · Day 子 / Them · Day 申

Try this: Use the easy pull for the hard task: start together, then split the finish.

Watch for: You agree so fast you skip the check. Agreement is not a plan.

The easy lock · Mild

You · Hour 巳 / Them · Day 申

Try this: Use the easy pull for the hard task: start together, then split the finish.

Watch for: You agree so fast you skip the check. Agreement is not a plan.

Who sets the pace · Mild

You · Day Wood / Them · Day Water

Try this: Say who is leading this one. One leads, one follows, then swap.

Watch for: Whoever is louder sets the tempo. The other waits, then withdraws.

The missing piece · Mild

Try this: Name the missing piece out loud and let one of you own it.

Watch for: Each of you fills the hole with your own habit. The gap stays.

08 Just for fun

Picked from your two charts together: the element you share most sets the mood, the one you both lack sets the menu.

Where to go

A cocktail bar, gallery or somewhere refined

What to eat

Fresh greens, herbs and something sour: salads, pickles, green tea

What to watch

Heists, thrillers and sharp documentaries

What to do

A museum, a workshop, or a well-planned trip

09 More of your reading

Their side of the pattern

Under relationship pressure, Sam tends to go quiet and adapt, reading the mood before saying what Sam actually needs. That keeps the peace, but Sam's own position can quietly erode, so ask directly what Sam wants and give room for a slow answer.

The pattern to recognise

The early sign is speed meeting caution: one of you wants an answer now, the other goes quiet to think, and small plans flip without warning. Notice when a simple question about the weekend turns into a sudden debate, and treat that moment as the pattern, not the topic.

Next time

In a future partner, look for someone who offers steadiness without making you feel dependent, and who supports your drive while having their own. Do differently by communicating your needs for support early, and by building mutual independence so the relationship stays balanced.

How this was worked out

Both charts are drawn from the birth details, then compared: how your Day Masters interact, how the elements complement each other, where your branches harmonise or clash, and which friction patterns are built in. Each of you also has a running 10-year luck cycle, and the next twelve months are scored for the two of you. The report puts all of this into plain, practical sections.
